Montreux This is the type of cookbook that is a pleasure to read as well as cook from. Nice pics, nice recipes, nice cultural and personal information from the author. (Doesn't have instructional type pics though, if that's what you're looking for, more like artful pics) Loved it and would recommend.

The term 'la Grecque', meaning 'in the Greek way', conveys perfectly the kind of food Pam and Kosta Talimanidis are known for: stylish yet homely dishes that look to both sides of the Greek/Turkish divide for inspiration. Clever and understated offerings include ribbons of silverbeet tossed in the pan with roasted walnuts and gorgonzola, which melts over the other ingredients; or fillets of whiting simply dressed with olive oil, dill and lemon sauce, and a tangle of shaved fennel. There's proper taramasalata, salt cod croquettes and other mezze, plus delectable desserts like slow-roasted nectarines drizzled with mascarpone or rich chocolate tart. Inspired by Kosta's Greek heritage and by the many years Pam spent in his home village of Polypetron learning about Greek food and cooking from Kosta's formidable mother Yiayia, she has gathered recipes, both traditional and modern, that showcase the simplicity and incredible flavors of the cuisine. This is Greek food at its best. Combined with a charming personal narrative and illustrated with spectacular photography of the dishes, the breathtaking coastal surrounds and village life in Greece, la Grecque will have you yearning for the Mediterranean, and for the incredible flavors of its cuisine.

"Kosta Talimanidis is one of the great, eccentric, naturally gifted restaurateurs." Independent on Sunday
