Jo Ann Russo : Careers Without College: No B.S. Necessary before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Careers Without College: No B.S. Necessary:

From Library JournalRusso discusses jobs open to high school graduates in ten fields of work: advertising, banking, commercial art, data processing, fashion merchandising, finance, nursing, publishing, retail/restaurant management, and travel. For each field, she describes entry-level positions, career paths, areas of specialization, and desirable preparation. She concludes with a brief chapter on applying for jobs. Russo writes in a conversational, although sometimes ungrammatical, style, and her information is current. She does a good job of distinguishing between positions in a specific industry that require a college degree and those that don't. Although her book is directed at high school students, adults considering a career change could benefit from it too. Wendy Alex, Tampa-Hillsborough Cty. P.L.
